

THROGS VISIT BABY EXHIBIT

Children Stage Play Representing Battle of Disease and Health.

FLAGS FOR BABIES' HOMES

Celebration Committee Has Colors for Every Family with Infant—Exhibit Headquarters Popular.

Despite the circus and warm weather the central exhibit building of baby week was crowded last night by parents and children to witness "Judith and Ariel," a play of the battle between disease germs and sunshine. The cast was made up of children of the Grover Cleveland School.

Three little boys representing tuberculosis germs enter the dark, dirty room of Judith, a pale, sick girl. "Headache," "Cold" and "Weariness" follow their friends "Tuberculosis" into the room and begin tormenting Judith. A boy scout and campfire girl enter the room and beg Judith to come out into the open and play, but Judith is too weak to do so. The germs, feeling that they have won a victory, are happy. A visiting nurse enters, however, opens wide the window and cleans up the room. Immediately "Light," "Life," "Vigor" and "Vim" romp into the room and put the germs to flight.

Flag for Every Baby's Home. Today is flag day of baby week. All day yesterday a corps of workers was busy at baby week headquarters, 725 Fifteenth street northwest, sending flags to more than 2,000 mothers. In order that the stars and stripes might fly today from every home in the city in which there is a baby under 1 year of age. The committee was unable to get out all of the flags last night, and requests those mothers who have not received them to call at headquarters this morning. They are free.

The play last night was directed by Miss Cecil B. Norton, Miss Clara Hartog, and Miss Frances Fairley. Those who took part were Ray Buckner, Catherine Wunderlick, Carl Dennison, Doris Baxter, Ella Bryan, Walter Ogus, Hugh Maddox, John McIndon, Marie Grafan, Mildred McLeod, Fannie Dodek, Annie L. Wilson, Margaret Dorich, Andrew Newman, and Thelma Castle.

A steady flow of men and women, poor and rich, visited the central exhibit room, Fifteenth and F streets northwest, yesterday to view the scores of attractive babies.

Something is going on at the central exhibit every minute every day. Yesterday the program started at 12:30 with an address on "Little Mother Leagues" by Mrs. Max West, of the Children's Bureau. During the afternoon the children of Friendship House demonstrated the Montessori educational system, followed by a "little mother" demonstration by the Little Mothers Club of the Washington Diet Kitchen Association. Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, president of the Mothers' Congress, supervised and put the final touches on the various exhibits yesterday. One of the most attractive was that of the Parent-Teacher's Association, showing wholesome and unwholesome baby foods.
